THE DWARFS AND THE ELVES FOR THE ENVIRONMENT

Once upon a time, two kingdoms ruled by the Dwarfs and the Elves lived on the banks of river La Granada, located in the rural area of the beautiful municipality of El Doncello Caquetá. The Dwarfs lived in taverns and they were dedicated to create machines to take oil from the river. In contrast, the Elves were engaged in farming and creating handicrafts. They worried mainly about the welfare of nature, since it gave them everything they needed to live.

In time of scarcity, the leader of the Dwarfs, Theodore, went to the territory of the Elves to make a proposal that would benefit the two kingdoms. This proposal intended that the Elves gave their territory to the Dwarfs so that they could get petroleum, and that way, build a big city where the Elves could sell their agricultural products. When Theodore arrived, he was surprised that the Elves rejected the proposal because the way they thought was different from Dwarfs', and they also knew that this proposal would affect the environment and the production of their food. The response of the Elves made Theodore returned to his kingdom where he started to build a wall to prevent the Elves from entering. The Dwarfs got angry and began to cut down trees and extract oil. This is caused the eco-system to be affected, and the Elves were also affected because of the lack of water.

Therefore, the Dwarfs got sick and some of them died due to lack of food. Then, King Theodore went to the Elves' kingdom to ask for help and beg forgiveness for all the damage they caused to the two kingdoms. The Elves had compassion and decided to restore all the nature destroyed by the Dwarfs. Both Dwarfs and Elves cooperated at planting new trees in the forests, cleaned the environment, and created renewed kingdoms to improve their quality of life.

At the end, Dwarfs and Elves learnt the value of nature. We have to take care of the richness of our natural resources and cooperate with others to preserve our beautiful environment.

THE FORCED JOURNEY

While Tina was in an emergency meeting with her flock, a poor Chilga burst in. It felled breathless in the middle of the crowd. Tina shouted: Check it please. Then, the most veteran of the swallows set in front of poor Chilga and exclaimed ¡Tina! My grandmother Petra predicted the tragedy; this poor bird has also been the object of them. Of those languid and heartless beings that made the mountain disappear. Not only are we living through this horrible drought, but the old forest birds' too; I remember when we arrived with Jacinto, my grandmother's husband and his family; everything was greenery, millions of trees, lots of rain and friends. The swallows heard the story, while the Chilga little by little recovered. We do not have water - it's true, the Chilga replied - I know you do not have either.

Then, Tina said: Dear friends, the theme is, the disappearance of rain, water and forest in our home. - Friends, please listen, as we know that everything in this place is over, we only have one way out. - We have to migrate to the tropics, there are abundant rains and we can take advantage of it, to find other colonies of swallows and so, we will comment on our sad situation. The Chilga very worried cut the conversation and said - and me? Please swallows, I have come for help, and my specie has become extinct, do not let me die in this inhospitable place, take me with you. It's not possible! You will not be able to fly as long as we do. Replayed Tina. Then he continued; the day that Eliza my mother died I was sure it was our end. The veteran flock died first, they were old, my uncles, cousins and friends died too. That was the moment I realized that the waterfall was dry, there was no forest and it had been a long time without raining.

Tina reflected and said: I will take care of the Chilga - ¡you will go with us! surely there, in the Arctic, you will find family and you may have a better life. Tina spread her wings and made a movement in the hot air, wagged her tail quickly, even knowing that it would not be an easy trip, but fate was waiting for them.
